was nominated for a
King's Education Award 2023

April 2023

King's College London

He is the professor who taught us intro to microeconomics. Although we did not have offline classes because of the pandemic. His online classes were very humorous and interesting. He would often share interesting facts about London and interesting places to visit in announcement. He was not only our professor, but also a friend who helped us to experience London better. He told us to have fun and had a variety of jokes in every class so that I didn't feel any boredom or tiredness. I was honoured to have a professor with such an outstanding style to guide me through the course.
